

Our UNCONDITIONAL COMMITMENT

We continued to rebuild our core program in 2022, working with newly referred teens as well as new volunteers. Volunteers continued to wrap support around both teens in care and young adults who have aged out.

We also expanded programming to better support youth as they transition to adulthood. Over the years, we had watched as, even with support of volunteers and staff, many youth struggled, simultaneously having to learn to manage housing, employment, finances, education, and/or health care issues.

Because of support from generous donors like you, in late 2021, the DCFYI board approved our first expansion of services, adding the Open Table program.

In Open Table, six to eight trained volunteers are paired with a youth (or "Friend"). They meet weekly for a year. Table Members support Friends in achieving whatever goals they set for themselves. The Friend is in charge; Table Members assist and share social capital to expand the Friend's resources.

2022 ANNUAL REPORT

An Open Table Opens Up Opportunities

For anyone who grew up in a “traditional” home or family environment, the presence of a group of interested adults in their lives is so common as to be taken for granted. Not so for youth who have been in foster care. That’s why the Open Table program is such a boon for youth as they age out of care.

Seanna has participated with DCFYI since she was 17 and remembers vividly her first group activity: paintball! Now 25, she was matched with a Table in 2022 at a challenging moment in her life.

“At that time, I was looking for apartments or room shares,” said Seanna. “And I didn’t know the first thing about looking for an apartment or a room.” Enter Open Table.

“It helped me get a better sense of what I should be doing,” said Seanna, who was matched with a group of seven. “I saw my Table quite frequently about finding an apartment and a job.”

She’s currently on a waiting list for a housing voucher, a process Seanna would have had trouble navigating on her own. As an Open Table participant, she didn’t have to.

Her Table members have also helped her with the ongoing job hunt. Although Seanna already knew she should be punctual and dress professionally, her Table members encouraged her to answer interview questions with full, complete thoughts and sentences.

“I’d never thought of that before, but they’re slowly getting me into it,” she said.

Amy Donin is one of Seanna’s Table members. Amy has had the opportunity to engage with Seanna not just during Table meetings, but while driving her home a few times. She learned during those drives that Seanna loves art and drawing, for instance.

As someone who isn’t that much older than Seanna, Amy remembers well some of her concerns – finding that first apartment, that first job – although she knows she had one thing Seanna hasn’t had.

“When I had issues with apartments, who could I call? Parents, friends, and coworkers could help me out,” she said. “I couldn’t imagine not having that support.”

Like Seanna, Amy said she’s learned from the wisdom and experience of other Table members as they bounce ideas off each other. “We’re all different people,” she said, noting that having such a diverse group is beneficial in other ways: for instance, when one member has a scheduling conflict or is less familiar with a topic, there’s someone else who can step up. “It’s nice to have that whole network.”

Open Table helped me get a better sense of what I should be doing.

And of course, that’s the point of Open Table. As she closed in on the one-year mark, Seanna anticipated keeping in touch with some Table members. She is quick to acknowledge how beneficial the Table has been for her.

“The most helpful thing I learned from them in the last year?” Seanna asked rhetorically. “Honestly, just stay positive. There are a lot of ups and downs, but you can learn from your downs and just be better.”

Our Mission
DCFYI creates a supportive community and lasting relationships for teens and young adults who are in or have aged out of foster care.
